Will bike and scooter shares overpopulate La Jolla?

By DAVE SCHWAB | LA JOLLA VILLAGE NEWS

In the last edition of the La Jolla Village News, we featured “Bird” Segway Kickscooters ES1 electric scooters that are seemingly everywhere along the beachfront in Mission and Pacific beaches. The 30- to 40-pound dock-free electric scooters, capable of speeds up to 15 mph, are available through a scooter-share service via a smartphone app.

But, with several new app-based dock-free bike share programs, could this sudden propagation present a new DecoBike situation?

Begun by Travis VanderZanden, who was previously an executive with Uber and Lyft ride sharing, Bird Scooters launched in September 2017. The company started in Los Angeles, and has since spread from Venice Beach down to San Diego. Bird plans to branch out to dozens of other markets this year.

In Pacific Beach and elsewhere along the San Diego coast, the new mode of transportation played to mostly mixed reviews.

“Bird scooters could be a unique opportunity to offer an alternative transportation model, and last-mile commutes that align with our eco-district principles, while mitigating some of Pacific Beach’s parking and traffic issues,” said Sara Berns, executive director of Discover PB, the community’s business improvement district. “However, we want to ensure that the company and its ridership are adhering to public safety concerns, and that of our merchants.”

“We have reached out to work with the company to help alleviate some of those issues to ensure they are not impeding on our existing business community, but rather enhancing it,” she said. “We look forward to them working with us and the community at-large.”

Dan Michaels, a Pacific Beach business owner, turned his thumbs down on the new alternative ride share service.

“These new electric scooters for rent all over PB are getting annoying,” said Michaels on the Next Door social media site. “They are leaving them everywhere and [they’re] allowed to operate without a business license. Riders are intoxicated renting them, under age, and don’t obey any laws of the road. Then when finished, they are leaving them in front of doors, ramps, etc.”

The more, the merrier?

Not only have Bird Scooters set up shop in PB. But, now, LimeBike, a dock-free, app-driven bike rental business model similar to Bird Scooters, as well as two other providers, have pervaded the landscape.

According to a recent press release: “LimeBike brought out its bright green bicycles on Feb. 16, making it the first dock-free bike share business to launch in the City. Soon after, Ofo planned to begin deploying its yellow bikes to share. And, on Feb. 23, Mobike rolls out its signature silver and orange dock-less bikes to locations in San Diego.”

LimeBike let bikes loose in LA two years ago, expanding to Imperial Beach and National City last year. Currently available in more than 45 markets, the recent spike in Bird Scooters and bike shares popping up in San Diego has piqued the concern of some La Jolla residents.

Bird Rock Community Wall pays homage to residents past and present

By DAVE SCHWAB | LA JOLLA VILLAGE NEWS

An ongoing beautification project, Bird Rock Community Wall at the Waverly Gate Entrance to Bird Rock Joint Use Park spotlights community residents past and present along with their accomplishments.

Residents, their relations, even their pets are immortalized on the community wall, which was officially dedicated on Feb. 5, 2011. The first honoree on the wall, much smaller back then, was past Bird Rock Community Council president Joe La Cava, recognized for his outstanding community service.

A special plaque commemorating LaCava is featured in the center of the first section of Bird Rock community wall. Joe Parker, the 2011 BRCC president, led the dedication ceremony.

"It took Joe (LaCava) more than five years to get that gate entering the park from Waverly Street on the north approved by San Diego Unified School District for Bird Rock Elementary," said local artist Jane Wheeler, who produces tile mosaics appearing throughout the community on benches, walls and flagpoles.

"The wall symbolizes how Bird Rock families and merchants come together time and time again, put aside our individual differences, and provide for the common good of our community," said LaCava.

PEARL PREIS

The wall was originally designed by Wheeler to have a three-fold purpose: To honor Joe La Cava, fundraise for Bird Rock Elementary, and connect the community together.

Since the outset, local residents can purchase customized, handmade mosaic 6-inch by 6-inch tiles crafted by Wheeler costing $150 each to be inlaid into the community wall. Fused glass embedded in the wall was created by community members at Birdstock 2010, and mini tiles with Bird Rock street names are hidden throughout is structure.

Wheeler thinks of the community wall as a "living quilt."

"It's got the names of people, their kids, their businesses, when they graduated from BRE, their pets; it's a big collage of the Bird Rock community as it has evolved," she said.

From the outset, the community wall has had a different theme each year. In 2012, for instance, the theme was the 60th anniversary of Bird Rock Elementary School.

Fall of 2014 marked the installation of a new section of the Waverly Gate Community Wall, which that year was dedicated to the 20th anniversary of the Bird Rock Community Council founded in 1994.

"The theme this year is Bird Rock community spirit," said Wheeler, who added she looks forward to working with families to "personalize" their tiles.

"I try to visualize each family, and select something appropriate for them, like putting a starfish, or some other cool prints, petals, glass or different inspirational words on it," she said. "The coolest part to me is the time capsule effect. 'It's not just me and what I want to do or design. It's actually the community designing it as it grows.'"

Wheeler hopes to have her next 2018 themed panel commemorating community spirit done by the end of March.

The artist noted there's plenty of room left on the wall. "Ten years at least," she said.

To purchase a community wall tile contact Wheeler at dwheeler@san.rr.com or call 619-822-1120.

Future energy options to provide municipalities with affordable, clean energy

By BLAKE BUNCH | LA JOLLA VILLAGE NEWS

When one thinks of who provides their power in San Diego, there's not much of a delay. That's because in the City, as is the case throughout California and the rest of the U.S., there is currently only one utility provider – San Diego Gas and Electric (SDG&E).

By December, however, that company may no longer be the only provider in the utility market. San Diego-based nonprofit, Climate Action Campaign, has been pushing local and state legislators to adopt a "Community Choice Energy" plan, or "Community Choice Aggregation (CCA)" which would allow room for competitive rates and providers.

Ultimately, residents would have the option to choose whether or not they wanted to utilize a more cost efficient or cleaner provider.

La Jolla resident and volunteering consultant for the Climate Action Campaign, Mark Hughes, spent 34 years in the electric power business before his retirement in 2012. During this time, he worked in coal-fired power plants, with 15 of those years at Solar Turbines, who provided equipment to oil and gas companies.

"During the late '90s and early 2000s, I had a friend and colleague explain the concepts of greenhouse gases," said Hughes. "As an engineer, I decided that I had to make a switch. What is measured emission-wise are defined as 'criteria emissions,' which include carbon monoxide, lead, ground-level ozone, nitrogen dioxide, particulate matter and sulfur dioxide."

As a result of his work with the Climate Action Campaign, this area in particular, Hughes began to attend municipality meetings where energy would be discussed by SDG&E. Hughes claims that he was astounded at what they had to say.

"They claim that it is super expensive to build these facilities," said Hughes. "In reality, you can build an equal facility for less cost with a greater longevity than a hyper-expensive facility."

In her inaugural "State of the District" address, Councilmember Barbara Bry lauded the Community Choice Energy plan as a key aspect of future growth, even going so far as to co-author a Voice of San Diego article in favor of the burgeoning concept.

"Community choice energy... would allow the city to establish a nonprofit to replace the public utility as the purchaser of power. CCA is key to ensuring the success of the climate plan's ambitious 100 percent renewable energy goal," the article read.

A home in La Jolla utilizes solar panels to cut down on environmental impact.

SULLIVAN SOLAR POWER

"CCA would allow the city of San Diego to invest in local sources of renewable energy and to provide ratepayers with clean energy options at lower costs," it continued. "Currently, San Diego Gas & Electric owns a monopoly, and consumers do not have a choice."

So if there has historically been one utility provider, how would CCA affect SDG&E?

The City seems to be working to provide an alternative. The Clean Air Coalition, functioning as part of the City's Climate Action Plan, is "A broad group of local community, business and environmental leaders joining together to ensure a diverse range of voices are heard before important decisions are made about San Diego's climate future."

for the Feb. 26 meeting of La Jolla Parks and Beaches, Inc., community park planners resoundingly said “no” to dock-free scooters.

“How do we stop this invasion of our sidewalks?,” asked Sally Miller of LJPB, whose mission is to preserve, protect and enhance La Jolla parks and beaches. “If we don’t stop this now, we’ll be invaded by every [other] vendor while we’re trying to protect our parks, beaches, sidewalks and streets. They [riders] can’t just invade us without our permission.”

Though bike and scooter sharing were not on the agenda for that meeting, LJPB members felt the topic important enough to vote it onto the agenda as an emergency item.

The action then invited other comments by board members.

“These scooters are competing with people who have rental bikes,” noted Phyllis Minick.

John Shannon said he almost ran into a Bird scooter operator with “no taillights.”

“We need to remember that we’re an advisory group for parks and beaches, not roads and streets,” cautioned LJPB president Ann Dynes.

Mary Ellen Morgan suggested LJPB ought to consider modifying its policies to address scooter proliferation.

“We can only ask the City to stop it,” replied Dynes.

“An overall policy with parks and beaches might stop this (scooters) creeping in,” countered Morgan.

“This isn’t just about bikes, but about every single vendor who thinks they have the right to throw whatever they want at us on our sidewalks,” concluded Miller. “They didn’t get our permission to come in and raid our town. If we just let any company come in, it will open up a Pandora’s Box, and we’ll have all vendors covering all of our sidewalks.”

Dynes suggested letting the La Jolla Village Merchants Association “take the lead on this,” as the community organization representing business interests.

University of California leads the way to make Paris Accord a reality

Mitigating climate change and the harms it poses to humanity is one of the biggest challenges facing the international community; however, the University of California (UC) has identified a three-step plan to achieve deep decarbonization that may lay the groundwork for policy-makers around the globe to take action to meet the goals outlined in the 2015 Paris Agreement.

A paper published February 27th in Nature Climate Change amplifies this message and presents the strategy developed by a 27-member team, which was uniquely comprised of researchers, facilities managers, sustainability officers and students from across the UC campuses. They convened two years ago to help the UC identify strategies to become carbon neutral by 2025.

“Cities, firms and other local actors are on the frontlines of serious action to address climate change. Where they succeed the rest will follow,” said team member and lead author of the Nature paper David Victor, a professor at UC San Diego’s School of Global Policy and Strategy. “The University of California system is poised to be one of the world’s most important leaders.”

The University of California, covering 10 campuses with more than 250,000 students, pledged to become carbon neutral by 2025—an ambitious goal that can now become a reality, thanks to findings in a recent report by the team, which in addition to Victor, includes Dave Weil, UC San Diego director of sustainability and carbon neutrality. The report presents a feasible strategy to achieve a measure that would be especially game changing:

replacing natural gas with climate-friendlier options.

Making carbon neutrality a reality

“Some decarbonization pathways are surprisingly economical,” said the report’s lead author Alan Meier, a senior scientist at Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (a U.S. Department of Energy lab managed by the University of California) and adjunct professor at UC Davis.

Like the state of California, UC campuses rely on highly efficient power plants that burn natural gas. Since natural gas accounts for two-thirds of the greenhouse gases emitted by all UC operations, phasing it out will be critical for a carbon-neutral future.

The report’s three-step plan for weaning off natural gas entails aggressively increasing energy efficiency across all 10 campuses and five medical centers; replacing natural gas with biogas in the short term; and in the long run, electrifying all end uses of energy and switching to only renewable sources.

An immediate priority for reducing the UC’s natural gas dependency is to use less of it. Already, the UC is on the leading edge of energy efficiency, and the report encourages a continued push toward “deep energy efficiency” by retrofitting more existing buildings and designing new buildings to be not only highly efficient but also all-electric, rather than reliant on gas-fueled systems.

“The cost of renewable electricity is falling, and our ability to design efficient all-electric facilities is improving,” said Meier. “We can build carbon-neutral buildings.”

Deep efficiency would also mean cost savings, freeing up money to reinvest in further decarbonization measures. The report estimates that continuing to aggressively retrofit existing buildings at all campuses could capture an additional $19 million per year of net energy cost savings by 2025, on top of the $24 million per year the UC has already achieved over the past decade from its efficiency measures.

“Economically, energy efficiency is a no brainer,” said project director David Auston, a senior fellow at the National Center for Ecological Analysis and Synthesis (NCEAS) and researcher at the Institute for Energy Efficiency, both of UC Santa Barbara.

To wean campuses off of their remaining natural gas needs, the report assessed replacing it with biogas, or energy derived from organic materials such as food and agricultural waste, certain crops and biosolids from wastewater treatment plants. While chemically identical to natural gas, biogas is climate friendlier because it is renewable – the plants that produce the carbon burned for energy also consume atmospheric carbon.

The report frames biogas as a stepping stone to carbon neutrality for the UC, rather than a long-term solution. Like its fossilized counterpart, biogas is mostly methane, a greenhouse gas, which means methane emissions from gas infrastructure would still be an issue.

“We view biogas as an interim measure that buys us more time. Ultimately, it must be phased out and replaced by 100 percent electrification,” said Auston.

Complete electrification will mean converting all university buildings and facilities to electricity powered by solar, wind and other renewable sources, a conversion that is already underway at some campuses. A full transformation could unfold with time and some technological leaps – for example, advancing the technology and adoption of renewable energy storage and equipping existing buildings with heat-transferring technologies, such as heat pumps, to reduce their reliance on central heating loops.

Can the UC achieve its goal of carbon neutrality by 2025?

“The goal is achievable, but it may not happen the way people expect it to,” said Meier, alluding mainly to the temporary reliance on biogas to get campuses over the hump.

Goldberg lectures aim to bring cultural awareness to San Diego

By VICTORIA DAVIS | LA JOLLA VILLAGE NEWS

On May 14, Israel will celebrate 70 years of statehood. Since being granted its sovereignty in 1948, making it the first Jewish state in 2,000 years, Israel has remained a hot-button topic worldwide. Constant border disputes with Egypt, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Iran and other Middle East states have made Israel a conflict zone, with their religious struggles with Palestine making it an area of relevant interest.

But the clashes in Israel and its surrounding states runs deeper than surface-level media reports and political endeavors. This is why, for the past two decades, foreign policy advisor, writer and Israeli expert Jacob Goldberg has made annual visits to San Diego. Goldberg works to help people understand both the lives of Israeli and Middle Eastern citizens and the many challenges they face, both external and domestic.

"I do not try to be judgmental about the issues that I explain, or tell people what to think of them," said Goldberg in an email interview. "Rather, I am trying to put some sense into what seems to be incomprehensible."

Goldberg earned his PhD in Middle East politics from Harvard University and is a former senior adviser to Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak. He is the author of "The Foreign Policy of Saudi Arabia," and has also published numerous articles in Israeli newspapers and U.S. publications, including The New York Times and The Washington Post.

For the last decade, the internationally respected lecturer has been a professor at the College of Legal Studies in Israel, but once a year he shares lecture time with San Diegans. From March 12 to 14, Goldberg will speak for a three-night series program at La Jolla's Lawrence Family Jewish Community Center (4126 Executive Drive), covering a vast array of topics from the ascendance of Iran in a new Middle East landscape to the absence of an active U.S. in Saudi Arabia.

"People adore him," JCC's program director Brian Garrick said of Goldberg. "Some people might have opinions on a specific area, but his understanding of the region and geopolitical landscape is incredible."

Garrick added that hundreds of people from all backgrounds come every year to hear Goldberg speak and participate in the Q&As. When Garrick was offered the position a year ago, the cultural needs of people in San Diego was part of the impetus, he says, so the move from New York was an "easy decision to make." San Diego's Center for Jewish Culture is the county's only Jewish institution of its kind, and is dedicated to presenting high quality, nationally recognized arts, culture and Jewish education programs in hopes of expanding the cultural life here in San Diego.

"Understanding that culture is so important, whether you're Jewish or not," said Garrick. "We need to continually be relevant and Goldberg is giving those up-to-the-minute updates."

Goldberg says he usually analyzes the events of the preceding year, but since Iran and Saudi Arabia play a central role in this year's series, the lectures will highlight not only current events, but also fundamental issues related to the power structure in both countries that people are, as he says, "usually unaware of."

"It is not my intention to repeat what is being said and written in the media, but to give people a perspective, a framework, a context for what they see, read and hear, so that they get a better understanding of the Middle East," said Goldberg.

He adds, "I think that the Middle East is probably the most interesting and fascinating region in the world. No matter how much one studies it, there is always a vast area that is yet to be explored."

"We're fine with residents having a choice on where they get their power," said Tony Manolatos, an attorney with Manolatos, Nelson and Murphy representing the Clear the Air Coalition. "We just want to make sure that that option is equitable."

Hughes argues that not only would the facilities and overall quality of utilities be equitable, but, if anything, more efficient at less of a cost.

San Diego, being the "eco-friendly" city that it is, already has 43 percent of its power grid "green," according to Manolatos. He also feels that, in the future, it is a possibility to see a state-mandated 100 percent green energy directive.

"What happens, is the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) says 'We need to study this and get back with the costs,' said Manolatos. "We won't know until they [CPUC] weigh in."

Since cost and quality are paramount when it comes to public utilities, overall, according to Manolatos, it comes down to "cost and emission [regulation]."

As mentioned earlier, there is not much that can occur until the CPUC conducts their study, which, according to sources, should occur sometime in June. Until then, residents have good reason to take a closer look at where their power comes from.

Our mission is to improve the lives of Women and Girls through education.
Join us to share in our mission and celebrate our achievements.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER Dr. Edith Eva Eger

Dr. Eger is an eminent psychologist whose own experiences as a Holocaust survivor help her treat her patients and allow them to escape the prisons of their own minds. She is author of The Choices, a powerful, moving memoir, and a practical guide to healing. Dr. Eger has worked all her life for one cause: Turning tragedy into triumph. She leaves us with a sense of joy, compassion, and the sacredness of life; and she teaches us how we all can move from victimhood to empowerment and what it is we should let go of and what to hold on to. It is about the power of choice.

The published study, "Coral reefs will transition to net dissolving before end of century," was published on Feb. 23 in Science, a scientific journal.

Scripps chemical oceanographers, Tyler Cyronak and Andreas Andersson, were co-authors of this work.

"Ocean acidification is caused by the burning of fossil fuels, which form carbon dioxide in our atmosphere, which, in turn, is released into our ocean's via rainfall," said Cyronak. "This changes the chemistry, and, ultimately, the pH level of the water—becoming more acidic."

In turn, this makes it a problem for organisms that make calcium carbonate shells, such as coral, to create a foundation on which to thrive.

"Coral calcification is a biologically controlled process, whereas calcium carbonate dissolution in the sands is not," Cyronak added. "Our study showed that dissolution of coral sands is ten times more sensitive to ocean acidification than the process of coral calcification is. This could be because the corals are controlling how they build calcium carbonates skeletons with biological mechanisms."

'At the global scale, we can slow down the use of fossil fuels and emissions of CO2 to reduce the rate of ocean warming and acidification. On the local scale, we can implement practices that promote a healthy reef, including sustainable fishing practices and good water quality.'

"The sediments, which are comprised of calcium carbonate, are already eroding, but within the next few decades this loss will exceed the production of calcium carbonate," added Andersson. "In this context erosion refers to the dissolution of the calcium carbonate rock into its individual components of dissolved calcium and carbonate ions in seawater; like when you add table salt into a glass of water."

For their study, the researchers placed chambers on the seafloor at five different locations throughout the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. One chamber collected samples from Bermuda, while the rest were used in the Pacific in Hawaii, the Cook Islands, Tahiti and Heron Island.

The team is currently comparing their findings with lab simulations as well.

"We expose calcium carbonate sediments from different reefs around the world to different levels of CO2 and acidity levels while we simultaneously measure how fast they dissolve. We do this in custom made beakers under controlled temperature and CO2 conditions," said Andersson.

So what can be done to counteract our effects on coral reef systems?

"At the global scale, we can slow down the use of fossil fuels and emissions of CO2 to reduce the rate of ocean warming and acidification," said Andersson. "On the local scale, we can implement practices that promote a healthy reef, including sustainable fishing practices and good water quality. We can do this by preventing runoffs of nutrients, sediments, and waste products."

With the team currently at work in the lab, knowing that there are people taking steps to reduce humanity's impact on the environment is a relief to most. As stated previously, the next 30-plus years are crucial to counteract the effects of the ocean's acidification.

'Wind & Water' exhibit at Maritime Museum of San Diego

The Maritime Museum of San Diego, home to one of the world's finest collections of historic vessels, from sail to steam to submarine, announces the opening of "Wind & Water: Sailing in San Diego." The museum is proud to introduce this rare new photographic collection of historic, classic, and wooden yachts racing and sailing in San Diego.

The exhibit includes an impressive body of work to amaze and inspire visitors about sailing and San Diego Bay from America's Cup to historic museum vessels to traditional wooden boats sailed for recreation on the waterfront.

In the new exhibit "Wind & Water: Sailing in San Diego," images from international yachting and nautical sport photographer, Bobby Grieser, are paired with photographs from his close sailing and photography master friend Mark Albertazzi. This is a passionate example for both sailing and photography fostered by a deep friendship with two of the industry's most renowned nautical photographers.

The exhibit, located at Maritime Museum of San Diego's Star of India Hold Gallery is included with general admission. The exhibit is the Museum's latest example of intriguing, educational and entertaining interior maritime related exhibits visitors can explore within the fleet of historic vessels. Star of India is the world's oldest active sailing ship and one of 10 historic vessels guests explore with admission to the Maritime Museum of San Diego.

Visitors can purchase general admission tickets online at smdmaritime.org, or call 619-234-9153 ext.101, or visit the Maritime Museum of San Diego ticket booth and gift shop located on the North Embarcadero in downtown San Diego.

Acclaimed 85C bakery to open in UTC this fall

85C Bakery Cafe, a noted Irvine-based Asian bakery that opened a San Diego location in 2014, is planning to unveil a UTC venue at 4313 La Jolla Village Drive, Ste. 2275, in October of this year.

The bakery, which opened in Irvine to rave reviews and lines out the door in 2008, opened its 1,000th worldwide location in Houston in June of 2017 and its fourth San Diego location Feb. 23 in Point Loma. It also operates venues in National City, Mira Mesa and Balboa Mesa. The stores offer 60 types of fresh bread, 40 drink options and 60 pastry brands baked in-house every day, with its strawberry shortcake a notable entry.

The proprietors say they believe coffee maintains its taste consistency at 85 degrees celsius, hence the name.

Covo opening set in recast building

Following a three-year dormancy, a Prospect Street property is being reactivated as a multi-use venue.

Covo La Jolla, at 1205 Prospect, is set for reopening in early March following its yearlong tenure as the French bistro Bijou and, before that, as the Southern-fare venue Amaya.

The 10,000-foot space includes a 50-seat sidewalk patio and a casual-fare cafe featuring drinks from Bird Rock Coffee Roasters. The main dining area will feature special events for as many as 400 guests. On- and off-site catering will be available. A bar and lounge will open every Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m.

Covo will be open from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

La Jolla restaurants make AAA 4-diamond list

Four La Jolla restaurants are among 13 San Diego County venues to receive this year's AAA four- or AAA five-diamond awards for their excellence over the past 12 months, according to a Feb. 21 statement from the Automobile Club of Southern California.

La Jolla's A. R. Valentien (The Lodge at Torrey Pines), Donovan's Chop & Steak House, George's at the Cove and The Marine Room made the four-diamond list.

The three longevity pillars: Health, community and purpose

Doing it Better

By Natasha Josefowitz, Ph.D.

Health, community and purpose, these are the three pillars that will determine how well you age. The Rev. Doug Edwards, a minister as well as a psychotherapist and educator, gave a presentation at the community where I live. He discussed the input of these three pillars on the population he calls “elders,” those you may know as seniors, retirees, agers, oldsters, or old folks. What must be kept in mind is that these people are still growing and learning and have a connection to the future. Elders do not define themselves by their past or by who they were, but by who they will be.

After his presentation, Doug and I ate breakfast together as we always do when he visits White Sands. We spent the morning talking about the issues facing our older population. Here are some of his lecture notes, his comments, and the gist of our conversation.

So what impact do the three pillars have on this population’s health? Our society has overcome many fatal diseases, we have improved our nutrition and reduced the risk of death due to accidents and work-related injuries. However, the next two pillars heavily impact the longevity of these elders. In 1946, the average life expectancy was 47 for women and 46 for men; today it is 81 for women and 76 for men. Over half of the people over 75, mostly women, live alone. Studies have found that the deleterious effect of loneliness on the quality of life and health is comparable to cancer, diabetes, and smoking over a lifetime.

We have all heard the moaning about the over use of social media, everyone seems to be walking around with a cell phone oblivious to their surroundings. In fact, pedestrian accidents are on the rise due to people engrossed on their cell phones while crossing streets! However, another critical issue here is the loss of face-to-face interactions. The ability to read another person’s emotional state facilitates the conversation’s outcome and is beneficial to both.

Two populations are at the greatest risk for depression and suicide in our nation: teens and elders. While teen depression and suicide are attributed in part to the lack of in-person interaction because of technology, older people are less likely to use computers and mobile devices. They often lack companionship due to many of their cohorts being too old to visit, are ill, or have died. Yet it is critical to create opportunities to have face-to-face interactions. It leads not only to a healthier life, but to a longer one, too. Even baboons who have a friend live longer. Something as innocuous as a hand shake increases activity in our neurotransmitters, which produces oxytocin and dopamine. In other words, there is a beneficial physiological reaction. Today one third of the population states they have no one in their lives they can confide in. Given the fact that women live six to eight years longer than men on average, the importance of female friendships becomes even more vital.

The third pillar is purpose. This third driver of healthy aging tends to receive the least amount of attention as the marketplace has difficulty monetizing it like it does health. Purpose does not have to be world-shaking; all it has to be is a reason for getting up in the morning, something to look forward to, and, most importantly, someone who is relying on you. In other words, who are you helping? Where are you needed? What service are you rendering? Purpose isn’t a list of things to do; it is a list of what you care about and believe in, what gives you self-worth.

Edwards suggests that in looking for your purpose, you need to review your history, identify your gifts, abilities, and talents. What gave you pleasure? What felt meaningful? What is your passion? Reflect on your experiences; what did you say “yes” to? An easy and revealing exercise is to look at your checkbook and calendar. See what you find important by where you invested time and money; this will tell you what you care about.

This chapter of life can be the most meaning-filled, for it is in our years as an elder when we are freed from jobs and many demands and responsibilities. The three drivers of aging well are choices you make and decisions you live by. Can you synthesize your wisdom from a long life’s experiences and formulate it into a legacy? Perhaps the next generation will benefit from your accumulated wisdom; it will be your gift to the future.

La Jolla Playhouse announces departure of managing director, Michael S. Rosenberg

The board of trustees of La Jolla Playhouse announced that managing director Michael S. Rosenberg has accepted an appointment as the managing director of New Jersey’s McCarter Theatre Center. Rosenberg will remain at the Playhouse until May 1.

“The board is saddened to see Michael leave the Playhouse, but we wish him well in his new position at the McCarter Theatre Center. Michael has been a great leader over the last nine years, helping to cement the Playhouse’s position as one of the most esteemed producing theaters in the country,” said Margret McBride, chair of the Playhouse’s board of trustees. “He is departing on a supremely high note, with the institution in a healthy financial position. The Playhouse has a strong staff and board leadership structure in place, and we are pleased to report that artistic director Christopher Ashley has recently extended his contract for an additional three years.”

Ashley noted: “For nearly a decade, Michael has been my partner at the Playhouse. Words cannot express my gratitude for his leadership, support and unflagging passion for bold theatre. Mike has helped to build a superb staff, board and audience. I have truly enjoyed our collaboration and will miss him dearly.”

“I have thoroughly enjoyed my time at the Playhouse. It has been an honor and a true privilege to work with such an extraordinarily dedicated and talented staff and board; together we brought incredible projects to life,” Rosenberg said.

“I will especially miss working with Christopher – he is an amazing artist, leader and a close friend. It has also been a pleasure to work with the staff and faculty at UC San Diego, with whom we have forged strong bonds over the past decade,” said Rosenberg. “My life has been forever changed by this community, and I am deeply grateful for everyone’s support.

La Jolla Playhouse is a place where artists and audiences come together to create what’s new and next in the American theatre, from Tony Award-winning productions to imaginative programs for young audiences, to interactive experiences outside our theatre walls.

Currently led by 2017 Tony Award-winning artistic director Ashley, the Playhouse was founded in 1947 by Gregory Peck, Dorothy McGuire and Mel Ferrer.

Playhouse artists and audiences have taken part in the development of new plays and musicals, including mounting 95 world premieres, commissioning 50 new works, and sending 30 productions to Broadway – with two more set to open in spring – garnering a total of 38 Tony Awards, including the 1993 Tony Award for Outstanding Regional Theatre. The History of Heritage Place - A collection of rare historic homes

By LINDA MARRONE | LA JOLLA VILLAGE NEWS

The late La Jolla resident, author and noted preservationist, Patricia Schaelchlin, and her husband, Bob, created Heritage Place, La Jolla, in 1974. When they purchased the property, there was a 1917 bungalow on the site and they had both the home and the site historically designated in 1978. As part of the historic site plan, two more endangered homes could be moved to the 14,930-square-foot lot that spans a block of land in the Barber Tract. In 1979 and 2003, two Village homes from the late 1800s and the early 1900s were saved from the wrecking ball and moved there.

In 2001, the current owners purchased the property and worked with local architects and planners to design a unique enclave that now serves as a "living preserve" to three of these rare early cottages. They designed the enclave to function as a family compound for themselves and their five children and spent tireless hours to complete the extensive award winning restoration project.

The Rhoads House - Historic Site No. 128

This 1917 Craftsman-style bungalow began its life as a duplex and was already on the site when the Schaelchlin's purchased the property. It was moved to the location in 1928 from, by Horace Rhoads, a newspaperman who was instrumental in development. He made the home his residence after moving it to the Barber Tract. In 2006, under the direction of the current owners, the Rhoads House was impeccably restored and expanded to approximately 3,000 square feet. The home now boasts an open modern-style floor plan, with four-bedrooms, three-baths and a studio guest-house.

The Galusha B. Grow Cottage - Historic Site No. 133

Moved in 1979, the cheerful yellow 1895

Victorian Vernacular home is known throughout as the "Yellow Cottage." The home was built by baker, Galusha Grow, who lived in downtown. Grow used the house as a vacation home when it was located in the Village. In the 1970s, owners of the home wanted to demolish it and build an office/shop complex. Thankfully, they were able to work with the Schaelchlin's to have it moved. The home offers two-bedroom, 1.5-bath, high ceilings and a charming ambiance that tugs at your heartstrings.

The Cory House - 494 Arenas Historic Site No. 375

The final endangered home, moved to Heritage Place, was the home and office of La Jolla's first woman doctor, Martha Dunn Corey. The Victorian Bungalow is believed to have been built in 1913 and during its lifetime it was moved to several different locations before finding a home at Heritage Place in 2003. Beautifully restored, it offers an open floor plan with a large living, dining and kitchen area, loft-style bedroom, one-bathroom, board and batten details and has an inviting front porch.

There are only a handful of these early examples of early architectural history left, since most have been demolished over the years to make way for new construction. Heritage Place is currently listed for sale with Linda Marrone at Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage. This one-of-a-kind historic property comes with the Mills Act property tax savings and offers a variety of use options, including utilizing a condo plan that is currently in process.

Five Ways to Conserve Water Usage in Your Home $$$$$

- 1) Check faucets and pipes for leaks. A small drip equals thousands of gallons per year.
- 2) Take shorter showers. A four minute shower uses 20-40 gallons.
- 3) Run dishwasher and clothes washer only with full loads.
- 4) Plant drought-resistant plants and shrubs. Native plants are best.
- 5) Don't let that faucet run. Catch the water and put it to use!

With our limited rain, regional water restrictions are inevitable.
Remember, we live in a desert, and 83% of our water is imported!
