erected and backfilled; stairways, retaining walls, and walkways will be completed. September through November will be devoted to landscaping, clean-up and touch-up work.

All of this assumes, of course, that there are no "unanticipated hang-ups," either geological or in the form of protests and opposition from the Committee to Save Sunset Cliffs, which is now circulating petitions to put the project on the ballot.

Much of the initial construction work will be channeled through a roadway at the foot of Cable Street. After completion of the project, any rubble or debris will be removed.

The walls are supposed to be color-coated to blend in with the cliffs, and the whole area heavily landscaped. However, it will take several years for the foliage to mature and properly cover the cliff and walls, so the bluffs will initially look rather barren and sterile, but should improve with time. We hope. If it doesn't turn out right, or you have any questions, call Cal Chong (236-6998) at the City Engineering Department.

Lifeguard Scott Hinchcliff with the Cliff Rescue Vehicle

Cliff rescues have been part of the San Diego Lifeguards since before World War II. Scott Hinchcliff has been the lifeguard in charge of the ten-year-old cliff rescue rig for the past nine years.

"We have never lost anyone," stated Scott. "Every attempt has been made to warn the public of the cliff's danger, the signs are ignored, or worse yet, not even noticed. Most of the victims are out of towners, it seems, unaware or dubious of the danger.

The Sunset Cliffs rescue is the safest and the most secure method of cliffs rescue, the best thing that San Diego has. The city has already spent umpteen dollars to train us so why not utilize us to the fullest. Keep San Diego the safest place to come visit and live in."
