Annual PB Counts provides data on non-motorized mobility

By DAVE SCHWAB

Striving to create a more sustainable, equitable, and safe Pacific Beach, beautifulPB recently conducted its seventh annual PB Counts tally of non-motorized vehicles.

In 2015, beautifulPB (beautifulpb.com), a grassroots nonprofit, initiated PB Counts, an annual neighborhood traffic count done by volunteers in the western central area of Pacific Beach. The count is done on a typical August Saturday for two hours from 3-5 p.m. Counters record traffic distinguishing between vehicles types: people on bikes, walking, e-scooters, and other types of traffic (non-motorized scooters, etc.)

The results for this year's PB Counts conducted on Aug. 7 are still being tabulated and will not be released for a couple more weeks. But beautifulPB president Katie Matchett noted the program provides critical information about how people travel in the beach community, allowing beautifulPB to more effectively advocate for key improvements to roadways and transportation infrastructure. She added PB Counts is also the only community-led traffic count conducted regularly in San Diego County.

"For non-motorized travel, we look at all the different categories broken down into electric scooters, bicycles, skateboards, and people who walk," she said of the annual traffic count, which was started just before PB Pathways surfboard decals and wayfinding signage was installed throughout the community.

"At that time, the idea was to see if these new infrastructure improvements (signage) make a difference, as well as to get a sense for how people are traveling, especially along PB Pathways," she said.

PB Pathways routes were implemented in phases beginning in 2015. Phase I routes had an installation of pavement wayfinding markers and destination signage. Curb

MBHS senior earns national award for volunteering at Cabrillo National Monument

'I've always been a huge advocate for women's rights.'

— SITA ANTEL, MISSION BAY HIGH STUDENT

By DAVE SCHWAB

Mission Bay High School senior Sita Antel has won a national award for her volunteer work at Cabrillo National Monument honoring the centennial of the 19th Amendment granting women voting rights.

Bestowed by the National Park Service, the George and Helen Hartzog Awards in various categories honor park volunteers' hard work while drawing attention to their skills and contributions. Each year, nearly 300,000 volunteers across the NPS donate more than 6.5 million hours of service, for a value of more than $185 million.

On Aug. 25, Antel was named the 2020 national award winner in the youth service category for creating an exhibit "picket garden." She researched, prepared text, and created original artwork, as well as assisting with setting up the exhibition on women's suffrage that was made available to the public both in-person and online.

The 19th Amendment in-person exhibit reached thousands of visitors at the park while it was on display, and, since its publication, the online fully-accessible exhibit has reached more than 500,000 through the park website and social media series.

"Thanks to Sita's work on the exhibit, the park was able to highlight diverse under-told histories of women," said Elizabeth Skinner, Cabrillo's chief of interpretation. "Additionally, the picket garden she created sparked relevant and engaging conversations between visitors and staff about voting rights in the United States."

The Hartzog Awards are given annually to recognize the exemplary contributions NPS volunteers make to their park and to their community. George B. Hartzog Jr. served as the director of the NPS and created the Volunteers-In-Parks program in 1970. In retirement, he and his wife, Helen, established a fund to support the program and honor the efforts of volunteers.

An avowed history lover, Antel was thrilled to participate in a historic exhibition at a historic local monument. "The Point Loma Lighthouse built in 1854 was in itself a landmark of women's rights," she said pointing out, "The assistant lighthouse keeper position was often held by women, and was the first equal pay for equal work job for women under the U.S. government."

Noting it was great to be able to showcase women's history at a historical landmark, Antel enjoyed dressing up in period garb and doing historical interpretation for guests.

But being rewarded for her work wasn't anticipated.

"I wasn't expecting to win an award at all," Antel said. "I'm really surprised." Though she never applied for or knew she was even nominated for an award, Antel is proud that she "ended up winning on a national level in the youth category."

The 19th Amendment exhibit at Cabrillo National Monument was also visually stunning. "They illuminated the lighthouse in gold and purple, the colors of the suffragette movement," Antel noted.

Antel added: "I wrote the signs that were along the walkway and made the picket signs that were in the lighthouse garden. I did research on national and diverse women, not just Susan B. Anthony. The most important thing is these women's voices were being heard out there. That's what they deserved."

"I plan to get a history degree," said Antel adding, "I've always been a huge advocate for women's rights."

Antel would also consider a career in parks.

"I would be happy working in Point Loma or a smaller park, getting my hands dirty, doing a lot of things," she said. "I really love museums, interpretation, and education. I want to do something in the community that I enjoy, and that makes a difference."

CAMPLAND ON THE BAY CITED

Campland on the Bay and Mission Bay RV Resort have been reportedly slapped with a fine exceeding a quarter million dollars by the California Coastal Commission in penalties over public access. Coastal Commission chief enforcement officer Lisa Haage said Campland had signs posted indicating private use only, that the area was strictly for paying guests, and that their website promoted their property as if it were a private luxurious beach.

According to KGTV Channel 10, a deal has been struck for Campland on the Bay and Mission Bay RV Resort to pay $750,000 for free summer camps for under privileged youth. As part of the settlement, penalties are to include providing new public toilets, electric-vehicle charging stations, and removal of all signage or fencing that make the beaches look private. The parks have been directed by the Coastal Commission to return with a plan in 60 days for implementing the ordered changes, which are to take effect immediately.

“Campland on the Bay and Mission Bay RV Resort provide the most affordable coastal accommodations in the area, having served as conscientious stewards of public access and the surrounding environment for over 50 years in Mission Bay,” said Jacob Gelfand, vice president, operations for Terra Vista Management, Inc., which operates Campland. “The unprecedented package of public benefits offered by Campland on the Bay and Mission Bay RV Resort, including free camping for under served youth, reflects our longstanding mission to facilitate access to coastal recreation in so many forms.”

Added Gelfand: “These public benefits will also complement our plans to clean up of De Anza Cove, which the staff of the Coastal Commission previously recommended for approval. We look forward to continuing to work closely with the City, the Coastal Commission and its staff, and the local community to make these beloved destinations even more enjoyable for campers and the general public, as the need for waterfront camping and coastal recreation has never been greater in the wake of the pandemic.”

MISSION BEACH CRIME

District 2 Councilmember Jennifer Campbell has responded to a recent surge in criminal activity in Mission Beach. “I am alarmed by the spike in crime in Mission Beach over the past few months,” Campbell said in a release. “Since June 1, the San Diego Police Department has arrested 30 people in the area. Officers have confiscated 35 guns, some of them ghost guns. This criminal activity is simply unacceptable. People should not have to fear for their safety when enjoying our beaches.”

Added Campbell, “To combat this problem, SDPD will increase their presence in the area and the City will enhance lighting near Belmont Park. I will continue to work with SDPD Chief Nisleit and Mayor Todd Gloria to do whatever I can to make the beach area safer for residents, businesses and visitors.”

SUPPORT PB BEAUTIFICATION

The PB Town Council is working with San Diego artist Rob Tobin to beautify the Rec Center with mosaic murals, part of an overall improvement project to update the space inside and out. Mosaics are being created on surfboards donated by the community, which will be permanently mounted on the outer walls of the Rec Center. The mural will be the centerpiece of the PB Recreation Center Surf Garden, an attractive re-vegetation of the area with a water-restricted landscape design.

This project is entirely funded by contributions from the community, residents, civic groups and businesses. Please consider a tile sponsorship or donation. Your customized tile will be displayed permanently on the wall. Every dollar is tax deductible and goes to the Rec Center. Visit pbtowncouncil.org for more detail on this project or to make a donation. Any amount helps.

Why do leopard sharks return to shores of La Jolla?

Locals and visitors check out the leopard sharks in the waters off La Jolla.

By DAVE SCHWAB

For years it's been a mystery as to why leopard sharks return every summer in massive numbers to the coastal waters of La Jolla. Turns out the sharks, harmless to humans, are mostly female and mostly pregnant.

"What I surprisingly found while snorkeling is that the sharks weren't doing anything other than swimming," said Andrew Nosal, Ph.D., a marine biologist, and professor with the University of San Diego's Environmental and Ocean Sciences Department who has studied leopard sharks since 2007.

So Nosal took the next logical step to find out what they actually were doing.

"Watching them was not going to be enough," he noted. "So we started to track these sharks by attaching acoustical tags to them and following their movements. We had eight tagged sharks with depth and temperature sensors that we followed in a boat for 48 hours.

"We found the shark's movements were confined to just in shore off La Jolla's submarine canyon. And the reason they were there was that the canyon produces small waves with low-wave energy, so the waters are calmer."

But that's not the only reason why leopard sharks were there, pointed out Nosal.

"Calmer waters mean they are also warmer waters," he said. "On average, this zone was a degree or two warmer than the surrounding areas."

Nosal talked about deciphering the "other part of the puzzle," which is why leopard sharks return to La Jolla annually in large numbers.

"We found that 97% of the sharks in La Jolla are mature females," he

WHERE TO FIND LEOPARD SHARKS

The best spot to find the La Jolla leopard sharks is from the Marine Room beach. This site, in a secluded strip of the ocean, is about a mile south of Scripps Pier on the east end of the marine park. Once you enter the water, begin heading to the west, away from the shoreline.

said. "We very rarely saw or captured any juveniles. On top of that, we noted the sharks are mostly pregnant and would give birth eventually."

So what were mature pregnant female leopard sharks doing in La Jolla's waters?

"Our ongoing hypothesis concluded that these pregnant females were incubating their developing embryos in the warmer, calmer waters," said Nosal. "Like mother birds sitting on their eggs, these (cold-blooded) sharks were keeping their embryos warm occupying the warmest available water along the coastline, where they were accelerating the embryo's development and shortening their gestation period, which for leopard sharks is 10 to 11 months, longer than humans."

Nosal added a non-lethal examination of the contents of leopard shark's stomachs revealed they were going down into La Jolla's submarine canyon to feed at night, mostly on squid spawning in the canyon's shallows.

We are in Northern CA and she often comes up to visit home so she needs a reliable mechanic she can go to when things aren't going well or just for basic services. ramps and enhanced crosswalks were also installed in some locations.

In February 2016, bike lanes and street repaving came to Cass Street in North PB. Eventually, bike lanes will extend south on Cass Street to Reed Avenue. Improvements will continue as funding becomes available and staging with other road work allows. Pavement markers, signage, and road striping are generally easier to implement as compared to other traffic-calming measures that require engineering studies and/or infrastructure improvements.

Matchett noted PB Counts “continues to be useful as new and different projects come up in PB.” A case in point is the slow streets program that was implemented on Diamond Street during the pandemic.

“PB Counts is helping us see how people are using the adjacent side streets next to the slow street (Diamond),” Matchett said. “We take those numbers and share them as well as use them to say, ‘OK, what action can come out of this? What does this tell us about how people travel? What can we do to support non-motorized travel?’”

There are lots of little nuances that can be tracked via PB Counts, said Matchett. “For instance, we track whether people riding scooters or bikes are riding on sidewalks as opposed to on the streets,” she said. “If people are riding on the sidewalks, that tells us they don’t feel safe riding on the streets, which suggests something needs to be done to make the streets safer for people on scooters or bikes.”

Matchett pointed out PB Counts historically has shown that non-motorized travel is here to stay.

“We have seven years’ worth of data now,” noted Matchett. “That gives you a sense of trends over time. Generally, what we’ve been seeing is that there has been an uptick in non-motorized travel between pre-COVID and now. And we think that’s going to continue.”

Concluded Matchett: “It’s really

valuable to have this kind of information. We feel really lucky. This puts us in a position to be able to have conversations with the City on the kinds of infrastructure people are asking for.”

Uncle Chai brings authentic Thai street food to Pacific Beach

By DAVE SCHWAB

Uncle Chai Thailand Street Food owner Apichai Butrlakorn relocated to Pacific Beach because he liked the vibe. And it didn't hurt that there was plenty of foot traffic at his location at 4508 Cass St., Suite B, which he opened about five months ago.

"Something about PB is different," said Butrlakorn, who previously had a Thai restaurant in the Palm Springs area. "Everybody is more relaxed. It's a big crowd. Many people come in."

The restaurateur wanted to bring authentic Thai street food to the beaches.

"I wanted to show the way it is, nothing more, nothing less," he said. "The ingredients that you get here are what you get in Thailand. We don't put in bell pepper. We don't put in onion. It's just the meat and the basil. You get what I experienced in Thailand. That's the whole idea."

What's makes Thai cuisine unique?

"Most of it is the herbs that we put in there," answered Butrlakorn. "We use a lot of ginger, galanga (sliced dried root), lemongrass, and basil just to bring out the flavor. We get all the sauces and mix them together. Every dish is going to be different. Every flavor is different on every dish."

Concerning the "Uncle" in his

eatery's name, Butrlakorn said: "I'm 52 years old. I've got three kids. Around here I see all the younger generation. Everybody calls me, 'Hey uncle, what you got cooking?' So why not be called uncle? I'll take uncle instead of grandpa. All the customers call me Uncle Chai."

Uncle Chai said he's kept his menu lean to reflect what you would typically get on the street in Thailand. The menu is broken down into noodles, rice, curry, and soup dishes. There is also a special menu, sticky rice with mango and coconut cream dessert, as well as an assortment of drinks including Thai tea and coffee as well as soda and coconut water.

"I'm not here to fight with another restaurant," said Uncle Chai of his business model. "I'm here to bring in another option for customers. They come here for what I make, the way we cook it, simple, and what you find on the street in Thailand."

The restaurateur said he'd like to make Thai food more of a staple, than a curiosity, in his customer's diets. He also really enjoys doing what he does.

"I can't stop cooking; that's why I opened a restaurant," Butrlakorn said noting he's been attached to the restaurant business since he was a pre-teen.

Butrlakorn intends to keep his restaurant casual. "Come the way you are," he implored. "You don't need to have shoes or a shirt on. Just knock on the front door and say, 'I want some food.' Eat it and enjoy it and go back and do whatever you were doing. Go back to the beach. Enjoy your day. Just enjoy your life. That's how the street food is."

Pacific Beach's Zach Svajda turns heads, and lives his dream at U.S. Open

By MICHAEL J. LEWIS

The new realities of his life are slowly starting to sink in for Zach Svajda, an 18-year-old born and raised in Pacific Beach.

He was in the main draw of the U.S. Open for the second time, and this time won one match before bowing out in a tough four-setter to world No. 13 Jannik Sinner.

He's getting recognized more, being stopped for autographs, all the trappings of imminent fame. And he's taking it all in stride.

But still, there are some things you are never really prepared for.

Like when Novak Djokovic and his camp ask you to practice with him at the U.S. Open.

The world's No. 1 player and owner of 20 Grand Slam titles, here in New York seeking a calendar Grand Slam, asked Svajda to practice with him two days before the start of the U.S. Open.

It was, safe to say, a mind-blowing experience.

"Hitting with Novak, that was ... an incredible thing," Svajda said on Thursday, right after he lost to Sinner. "I was nervous. Really, really nervous. But he was really nice and gave me some tips about staying calm, and breathing during changeovers. It was such a thrill to hit with him."

Svajda's thrills on the tennis court have been coming more and more lately. After starting out at the Pacific Beach Tennis Club at age 2, under coach Matt Hanlin, Svajda has risen through the junior tennis ranks quickly.

Standing 5-foot-9 but possessing a powerful forehand and outstanding all-court game, Svajda won the USTA National 18s in Kalamazoo, Mich., the most important junior tournament for Americans, in 2019 and got the coveted U.S. Open wild card that came with it.

He lost in five sets to former Top 50 player Paolo Lorenzi in that match, but Svajda showed he had the potential to hang with top pros.

"That was so big for me, because I didn't know I could last five sets, against a great player, and that showed me I could do it," Svajda said. "It definitely motivated me to train harder and gave me hope."

After missing several months of 2020 with a heart-related issue due to contracting COVID (he said he's fully recovered now), Svajda has been playing pro tournaments in 2021 and repeated as champion at Kalamazoo in August.

Then here at the Billie Jean King National Tennis Center, he won scores of fans by beating former French Open semifinalist Marco Cecchinato in four sets in the opening round. Then against Sinner, with hundreds of fans crowding Court 10 cheering for him, Svajda blew a 5-2 lead in the second set, came back to win the third set in a tiebreaker, saving two match points in the process, before losing in four sets.

"To have the crowd screaming for me, and I raised my hands for more noise when I won the set and have them scream louder, that was awesome," he said.

Zach Svajda

Unnecessary equivocation: Taking the risk of expressing our opinions

By Natasha Josefowitz, Ph.D.

Doing it Better

In our society, we are often afraid to speak honestly and directly. We don't want to upset, offend, or step on someone's toes. We fear being seen as aggressive, pushy, opinionated, demanding, or critical so intensely that we often pussyfoot around and avoid what really needs to be said. And while I applaud our new-found sensitivity to other people's feelings, effective communication is often needlessly sacrificed.

We start our sentences with qualifications ("I may be wrong, but..." or "You may disagree, but...") and end our statements with questions ("Right?" "Yes?" "Okay?"). If we're so unsure of what we're about to say, why should anyone else listen? People often use a lot of unnecessary words such as: "whatever," "it's like," "I mean," or "you know," and that takes away from the strength of the message. This ineffective manner of expression is far too prevalent.

There are times when we do feel genuinely tentative, but this kind of "waffling" is indicative not of the uncertainty of our words, but more often of the fear of being judged negatively. No one can tell what it is we know for sure and what we don't. Sentences starting with "Isn't it true that..." or "You must agree with..." are often strong opinions or accepted facts, but they are misleading when couched in this tentative a form. "Could you have this done by Thursday?" may be a genuine question, but it is often a demand disguised as a request, the more honest statement would be: "I need this by Thursday, if it's a problem, please let me know."

Responding with slippery statements such as "Great" or "Interesting" does not let the person know what we really think. Ambiguous or insubstantial responses are not helpful. Only specific revelations about what we liked and disliked and the reasons why will allow people to understand if they have been successful and improve.

One of the biggest difficulties most of us have is clearly saying, "No," "I won't," "I can't," "It won't work," "I disagree," etc. Instead, we say "Not now, maybe later," "I'd love to but..." or "I wish I could." This, of course, makes people believe that you will do what they ask next time; and so, the game continues until either they give up in disgust or you do it out of guilt.

This sort of dodging comes from our fear of speaking honestly. Newcomers to a group or anyone outside the dominant culture will often use tentative language until they feel accepted. If we're unclear, then we can't be pinned down to an opinion or decision. If we're uncommitted in our language, then we can't be blamed if anything goes wrong. Communication is watered down to ineffectual levels. When people protect themselves by not speaking out, not asking important questions, not making suggestions, or not disagreeing when necessary, they rob their organizations, families, and relationships of a valuable resource — their minds. To people of older generations, having been raised to use "courtesy language" and never disagree, speaking directly feels like confrontation and is uncomfortable.

So for people to become communication risktakers, the group or organization must recognize and value forthright comments even when the advice does not turn out as well as expected. If only positive results are allowed, then nothing new, original, or creative will be attempted. Some organizations value harmony and agreement at any cost. If going along with the boss or the prevalent opinion is rewarded, then no one will take a chance on expressing a contrary opinion or suggest a different way of dealing with an issue.

Soliciting different points of view and insisting on straightforward, direct communication are essential to success when working with others. It encourages productive communication between coworkers, friends, and family members. The most fruitful conversations are those that include a variety of divergent opinions. It may feel good to have everyone in agreement, but nothing new will be learned.

In these days of polarization we take the risk that what we are saying could start an argument which may escalate into a verbal fight; each protagonist adhering ever more loudly to their opinion. Not willing to antagonize, we flip into avoidance of certain volatile topics. It may be a wise move in some circumstances; however, what is lost is trying to understand why and how the other person has come to these beliefs. Listening without judging is important, but difficult to maintain.

Language is a "power tool." Learning to use it is one of our most important life skills. Communication is indeed a two-way street.

GIRL SCOUTS EVENT AT KATE SESSIONS PARK IN MEMORY OF ASHLEY HEFFINGTON

In remembrance of Ashley Heffington, a fourth grade student at St. Paul's Lutheran School, and a member of the Pacific Beach Girl Scouts, an event will be held on Sept. 25 from 1-4 p.m. at Kate Sessions Park.

In 2009 on New Year's Eve, 9-year-old Ashley Heffington and her mother Cindy were both involved in a motor vehicle accident that took place on West Point Loma Boulevard and Sports Arena Boulevard. While stopped at a red light, Ashley and her mother were struck from behind by a motorist under the influence of chemicals found from computer keyboard cleaner cans. Ashley suffered severe brain injuries and died 13 days after the crash, on Jan. 12, 2010.

Since then, Cindy Heffington has been working with the local Girl Scout troops to spread awareness and hold educational and engaging events in memory of Ashley, a devoted Girl Scout who enjoyed giving back to her community. Cindy was also able to work with local Girl Scout troops to raise money and dedicate a plaque and a picnic table at Kate Sessions Park in memory of her daughter.

PB Fun Fact:

A lot of PB residents use the term "Locals' Summer" to refer to the time from after Labor Day to roughly November 1st, when most of the tourists have left, kids are back in school and the weather is still amazing.
